About Penang

Penang, once part of the Malay sultanate of Kedah, became a British possession in 1786 when Captain Francis Light established a fort on the island. It was one of the British Straits Settlements, along with Malacca and Singapore. The name "Penang" comes from the Malay word for betel nut tree. Initially known as Pulau Ka-Satu or "First Island," it was later renamed Prince of Wales Island. Penang, also known as "The Pearl of the Orient," comprises Penang Island and Seberang Perai on the mainland. Its capital city, George Town, is named after King George III.

Penang has transitioned from industries like pepper, tin, and rubber to becoming the Silicon Valley of the East. The Bayan Lepas Free Industrial Zone and Batu Kawan Industrial Park house numerous multinational corporations in automotive, industrial, aerospace, and medical devices. Penang, recognized as a UNESCO World Heritage Site alongside Malacca, offers a multicultural experience that defies simple description. Familiarizing yourself with the local culture will enhance your understanding of Penang.

Population

Penang has 1.77 million people (2020, DOSM), more than half of whom live on the Seberang Prai. The population is multi-racial, young, and equally distributed between males and females. The ethnic breakdown is as follows: Malay 44.4 percent, Chinese 39.1 percent, Indian 9.4 percent, and others 7.1 percent (2021, Penang Institute).

Religion

The official state religion is Islam, but freedom of worship is observed. Buddhism, Christianity, Hinduism, Sikhism, Taoism, and other religions are freely practiced – Muslim mosques, Buddhist and Hindu temples, and Christian churches are commonly found throughout Penang. Visitors can expect to be amazed by the diversity and profusion of festivals and other religious celebrations which occur regularly throughout the year.

Languages

The official language of Malaysia is Malay, but many locals are also proficient in English. Most Penangites are competent in more than two languages. Many locals speak “Manglish,” (Malaysian-English), an English-based creole with the grammar structure of the Chinese Hokkien dialect, which is unique because of the blend of Chinese with many “adopted” Malay and English words. This might not sound like English to visitors, which can lead to confusion. Listen for “lah:” appending a “lah” to the end of sentences for emphasis is a hallmark of Manglish.

Fares for visitors

In Penang, quite many attractions offer subsidized fare for local Malaysians. Visitors may notice the word “MyKad” stated on some ticketing boards. MyKad refers to the Malaysian national identity card, where statements stating “Price for MyKad holders” refer to prices applicable to Malaysian nationals. Ticketing information and entrance fees are usually displayed to avoid confusion. When prices are not stated, please remember to check before proceeding.

Dining etiquette

Some cultures are more formal than others. Knowing the proper customs before you head to dinner is always good. At a Malay or Indian warung, you might use a fork to chase bits of rice onto a spoon or use your hands to mash rice and sambal into a ball. At a Chinese restaurant, you will use chopsticks and a ceramic spoon. Being flexible, observant, and a good copycat is key to good manners.

Things to note during Ramadan

Ramadan is a significant Muslim event during the ninth month of the Islamic calendar. Muslims fast daily from dawn to sunset and refrain from drinking water during this period. Out of respect for those fasting, try not to waste enormous amounts of food or behave imprudently in front of Muslims during Ramadan.

Things to note for pedestrians

Walking around George Town is common and one of the best ways to tour this UNESCO heritage city, accessing quirky small lanes. Traffic lights and pedestrian crosswalks are available on most main streets. Pedestrians are advised to obey the pedestrian crossing lights for their safety.

Calendar

With four major religions represented—Islam, Buddhism, Hinduism, and Christianity—there is a high chance that public holidays and festivals will influence your travel experience. The best time to catch a festival (and the worst time to get anything administrative done) is autumn, when Penang celebrates Muharram, Diwali, and the Chinese Nine Emperor Gods Festival. Make sure to check the Malaysian calendar before planning your trip.

Attire

Depending on the activity. Generally, you can’t go wrong with clothes made of light cotton or other moisture-absorbing fabric. Swimwear, sunglasses, and sunblock will come in handy for days on the beach. Flip flops and strappy sandals are the most comfortable footwear for walking and sightseeing. Don’t bother with socks unless you can afford to launder your clothes daily. When visiting a classy establishment in Penang, you may want to adhere to the dress code.

Payments

As the use of digital payment services continues to gain traction, cash is still king in Penang, especially outside of George Town. Most of the best places to eat are usually no-frills—where you stand with your bowl in a crowded back alley—so keep a wad of small bills. Don’t expect street food stalls, hawker centers, or someone selling coconuts on the five-foot way to accept a credit card. ATMs and money changers are easy to find, even in remote areas.
